

- dances, Mr Oldworth . . . proclaims Maria his only daughter and gives her to Sir Harry. After a dance of Cupids, Hymen, &c. . . offering them eternal wreaths, the Druid of the Oaks, freed by the present powers of Beauty from that sequestered habitation to which by mystic spells he had long been doomed, appears to ratify their union, and astonishes the spectators by his magic influence, in a glorious vision of that felicity the virtues of the happy pair had so justly insured. An admirable vaudeville, and a grand dance, conclude the dramatic entertainment. . . Had it not appeared obvious that the whole was intended as a mere vehicle for the splendid spectacle, we do not suppose, in spite of the managers Orders and Puffs, that the author's labors would have been tolerated. The very excellent scenery, however, of the ingenious Mr Louthembourg preserved this piece from that damnation, which as a dramatic production, it justly merited." Receipts: £263 14s. 6d. (Treasurer's Book). Saturday 5
